

Abstract

A method of evaluating acute aortic dissection, which comprises measuring a D-dimer concentration in 5 blood separated from a human, and determining whether or not acute aortic dissection (Stanford type A or Stanford type B) has developed, on the basis of the measured concentration, a reagent for evaluating performing the evaluation method, and the like are provided.